Come Home to Yourself

5 practices for anyone who has lost themselves in love, in heartbreak, in burnout, or in giving too much

Hi, love.

If you found your way here, I'm guessing a part of you feels far away from yourself right now.

Maybe you gave so much in a relationship that you forgot what you actually like.

Maybe a heartbreak cracked something open.

Maybe you're running on empty from holding everything together.

Maybe you've said yes so many times you don't know what your no sounds like anymore.

Whatever brought you here, I want you to hear this first:

There is nothing wrong with you.

You didn't lose yourself because you're weak.

Somewhere along the way, you learned that to be loved, to be safe, to be good, you had to leave a little of yourself behind.

And what was learned can be unlearned.

This workbook holds five simple practices drawn from the way I work: through the body, the little one inside you, the parts of you that learned to survive, the stories you've been believing, and your energy.

They're not here to fix you.

They're here to help you come home.

Go slow. Be gentle. Be honest.

I'm so proud of you for being here. 💛

See you on the other side,

Libni

BEFORE YOU START

How to use this workbook

There's no right way to come home. There's only your way. Here are a few things that might help.

Make it a small ritual

Find 15 to 20 quiet minutes. Phone on silent. Something warm to drink. A pen you like holding.

One practice at a time

Do one practice per sitting, or one a day. You don't have to finish everything at once.
- 3

Read, practice, then write

Each practice has a short "why," simple steps, and journal prompts. Do the steps first, then let the pen move.

Pair it with the audio

If you have the companion guided audio, listen first and journal after. It walks you through all five practices.
- 5

You're in charge

If anything feels like too much, stop. Open your eyes. Feel your feet on the floor. You can skip, pause, or come back later.

Keep coming back

Use the 7-day tracker at the end. Coming home isn't one big moment. It's a choice you make again and again.

PRACTICE 1 • SOMATIC • THE BODY

Arrive in Your Body

Coming home doesn't start with figuring it all out. It starts with arriving.

WHY IT MATTERS

When we lose ourselves, we often leave our bodies first.

We live in our heads. In our phones. In someone else's mood. We scan the room before we ever check in with ourselves.

Your body has been holding everything you haven't had the space to feel. This practice is a way of saying: I'm back. I'm listening.

THE PRACTICE

- 1 Sit or stand with your feet flat on the floor. Feel the ground holding you. You don't have to hold everything right now.
- 2 Place one hand on your heart and one on your belly. Feel the warmth of your own hands.
- 3 Breathe in slowly through your nose, and let it out through your mouth. Make the out-breath a little longer than the in-breath. Repeat five times. Let your shoulders drop.
- 4 Notice three things you can feel: the weight of your body, the air on your skin, the texture under your hands.
- 5 Scan for tension. Wherever it is, don't fix it. Just say hello to it, and breathe into that place.
- 6 Softly tell yourself: "I'm here. I've arrived."

A GENTLE NOTE

If closing your eyes doesn't feel good, keep them open and let your gaze rest softly on the floor.

Arrive in Your Body

Right now, my body feels...

Where is the tension? What does it feel like? What is it holding?

The last time I felt at home in my body, I was...

What were you doing? Who were you with? What made it feel safe?

What my body is asking me for this week:

I'm here. I've arrived.

02

PRACTICE 2 • INNER CHILD

Meet the Little You

The little you is still in there. Still waiting for someone to come back for them.

WHY IT MATTERS

So many of the ways we abandon ourselves were learned when we were small.

The little one who learned to be good so they'd be loved.

Who learned to be quiet so there'd be peace.

Who learned they had to be okay so everyone else could be okay.

That little one isn't gone. They're in the way you over-explain, over-give, and wait to be chosen.

And the person they've been waiting for is you.

THE PRACTICE

- 1 Arrive first. Hand on your heart, three slow breaths.
- 2 Bring to mind a younger you. Maybe five, seven, or twelve years old. Let whatever age comes up, come up. A childhood photo can help.
- 3 Notice them. Where are they? What are they wearing? How do they look at you? How are they feeling?
- 4 Kneel down to their level. Tell them, out loud or in your heart: "I see you. You didn't do anything wrong. You don't have to earn my love. I'm here now."
- 5 Ask them softly: "What do you need from me?" Listen for a word, a feeling, an image.
- 6 If it feels right, hold them. Then make them one small promise you can actually keep this week.

A GENTLE NOTE

If heavy memories come up, you don't have to go there alone. Some of this work is best done with a guide or a therapist by your side.

Meet the Little You

Growing up, the little me learned that to be loved, I had to...

What I needed to hear back then, and what I'm telling the little me now:

One small promise I'm making to the little me this week:

Something playful, restful, or kind. Keep it small enough to keep.

I see you. I'm here now.

03 Name the Part That's Running the Show

The part of you that disappears to keep the peace isn't your enemy. It's a protector.

WHY IT MATTERS

There's a part of you that says yes when you mean no.

A part that holds on tighter when someone pulls away.

A part that goes quiet, goes numb, so you don't get hurt.

It learned this for a reason. At some point, this was how you stayed safe. How you survived.

Shadow work isn't about getting rid of it. It's about seeing it clearly, so it stops running your life from the dark.

THE PRACTICE

- 1 Think of a recent moment you abandoned yourself. You said yes, stayed quiet, gave too much, or chased.
- 2 Notice the part that took over. Give it a name: the Pleaser, the Chaser, the One Who Shuts Down, the Fixer, the One Who Holds It All Together.
- 3 Ask it: "What are you afraid would happen if you stopped?"
- 4 Ask it: "What are you trying to protect me from?" Listen without judging the answer.
- 5 Thank it: "Thank you for protecting me. I understand why you did this. You don't have to work this hard anymore. I can take it from here."
- 6 Notice how it responds. Whatever it feels is okay. Trust takes time.

A GENTLE NOTE

Go easy on yourself here. Meeting these parts can stir up shame. Shame softens when it's met with compassion, not criticism.

Name the Part That's Running the Show

The part that's been running the show is called...

It usually shows up when...

It's afraid that if it stops, then...

And what it's really trying to protect me from is...

The next time it shows up, the grown-up me will...

I see you. I can take it from here.

04

PRACTICE 4 • BELIEFS & MEANING

Rewrite the Story

You can't change what happened. But you can change what you've made it mean.

WHY IT MATTERS

Every pattern has a sentence underneath it. A story we started believing about ourselves.

"I'm too much." "I'm not enough." "If I stop giving, they'll leave." "My needs don't matter."

When we repeat a story enough times, it starts to feel like the truth, and our life starts to match it. But a story is a sentence, not a fact. And you're allowed to write a new one.

THE PRACTICE

- 1 Find your sentence. Write down the story your mind keeps repeating, in one line.
- 2 Separate what happened from what you made it mean. What would a camera have recorded? Everything else is meaning.
- 3 Listen to the voice telling the story. Whose voice does it sound like? Now imagine it slower, softer, further away.
- 4 Ask: "Where did I first learn this? Was it ever really mine?"
- 5 Ask: "What else could this mean?" Find three other meanings. Then choose a truer, kinder sentence. "I'm too much" might become "I'm allowed to take up space."
- 6 Say your new sentence slowly, three times. As you do, press your thumb and finger together and feel it land in your body. Use that touch whenever the old story returns.

A GENTLE NOTE

The old story will come back. That's not failure. Every time it does, you get to choose the new one again.

Rewrite the Story

The old story my mind keeps repeating:

What actually happened

Only what a camera would record.

What I made it mean

About me, about love, about my future.

Where did I first learn this story? Was it ever really mine?

Three other things this could mean:

My new, truer sentence:

It's a story, not a fact. I get to choose a truer one.

05

PRACTICE 5 • ENERGY WORK

Call Your Energy Back

When you give too much, you leave little pieces of yourself everywhere.

WHY IT MATTERS

In people. In places. In roles you've played for too long.

In the relationship that ended. In the conversation you keep replaying. In being the strong one, the fixer, the good child.

You don't have to say goodbye to anyone to do this. You're simply taking back what's yours.

THE PRACTICE

- 1 Arrive. Hand on your heart, three slow breaths.
- 2 Imagine a soft, warm light at the center of your chest. That's you. Your essence.
- 3 Think of a person you've been giving too much of yourself to. See a thread of light between you. Say: "I call my energy back to me." Watch the light travel home to your chest.
- 4 Now a place where part of you still feels stuck. An old home, a room, a city. "I call my energy back to me."
- 5 Now a role. The strong one. The fixer. The one who holds it all together. "I call my energy back to me."
- 6 Feel all that light filling your whole body. Tell yourself: "This is mine. It was always mine. I'm allowed to keep it."

A GENTLE NOTE

Notice what's not yours to carry: other people's moods, choices, and opinions. You can gently hand those back.

Call Your Energy Back

Where has my energy been going?

The people, places, and roles that have been taking more than I have to give:

What am I carrying that isn't mine to carry?

With my energy back, I want to spend it on...

I call my energy back to me.

Your 7-Day Come-Home Tracker

A suggested rhythm, one practice a day. Circle the practices you did, then check in with one word before and after.

DAY	SUGGESTED	PRACTICES I DID	BEFORE one word	AFTER one word	ONE WAY I CAME HOME TO MYSELF TODAY
DAY 1	Arrive in Your Body	12345
DAY 2	Meet the Little You	12345
DAY 3	Name the Part	12345
DAY 4	Rewrite the Story	12345
DAY 5	Call Your Energy Back	12345
DAY 6	Your favourite, again	12345
DAY 7	All five, with the audio	12345

At the end of the week: what's different, even a little?

Welcome home, love.

Look at you.

You arrived in your body.

You met the little you.

You named the part that's been running the show, and you thanked it.

You chose a truer story.

You called your energy back home.

That's not small. That's you choosing yourself.

I want you to know that coming home isn't one big moment where everything suddenly feels better. Some days you'll feel so close to yourself. Other days the old stories will come back loud.

That doesn't mean you're back at the start.

It means you're human. And now you know the way back.

Come back to these pages anytime you need them.

On the good days.

On the hard days, too.

You can honor who you were and still choose to become someone new.

You can thank that younger you for carrying you this far, and tell them they don't have to carry it alone anymore. 💖

See you on the other side,

A gentle note on care

This workbook is a space for reflection and personal growth. It is not therapy, counselling, or medical or psychological treatment, and it doesn't replace them.

These practices are meant to complement the care you may already be receiving. If you're working with a therapist, counsellor, or doctor, you're welcome to bring what comes up here into your sessions with them.

Some of this work can stir up old feelings and memories. Please go at your own pace. If any practice feels like too much, stop, open your eyes, feel your feet on the floor, and come back to the present. You can always return later, or with support.
